**Residing within the campus community is one of the most vital aspects of a student’s personal and educational development. Research on the experience strongly indicates that students who live on campus tend to attain higher GPAs, have greater satisfaction with their college experiences, are more involved in campus activities, experience greater personal growth, and are less likely to drop out. The residential experience contributes significantly to a student’s education and personal growth. To support the richest learning opportunity, both inside and outside the classroom, Barry University has made living on campus part of its educational design.*
